How to Use This Companion

Open your Bible beside this book. Any Bible will do.

Every chapter of scripture appears here in order, from Genesis to Revelation. Under each chapter heading you will find that chapter's threads, set in italics and marked with a diamond (◇). A thread names what a group of cross-references in that chapter carries, and the numbers in bold before it are the verses it runs across. Beneath the threads, every verse that carries a cross-reference is listed by its number in bold, followed by the passages that speak to it.

Turn to them. Read them side by side. The scriptures were given by one Author, and they read one another. These connections are not set down to be taken on anyone's word. They are laid out so that you can come and see.

The full library. The prophets and apostles spoke within a library larger than the one most Bibles carry today. Jude quotes Enoch by name (Jude 14–15). Where 1 Enoch, Jubilees, Jasher, Sirach, the Wisdom of Solomon, or another book of the restored library speaks to the verse in front of you, it is listed after the canon references for that verse and marked with a dagger (†).

Reading the references. A semicolon separates books and chapters (Gen 12:1; Josh 24:15). A comma separates verses in the same chapter (Ruth 4:13, 17). A dash joins verses that run together (Ruth 4:13–14). At the top of each page, the running head shows the first and last verse listed on that page.
